Washington, D. C., Dec. 20.—Mr. Edmunds during the session of the Senate to-day, in presenting a petition for the extention of the time for making pension applications, remarked that it was tly one of the printed petitions sent around by persons engaged in getdred sister of the republic of the United States. It was a great event, one of the greatest events of modern times. But a question of grave importance arose, and that question was, whether the time had come for Congress to undertake to recognize this new power among the powers of the world. He called attention to the situation of Congress, with the Senlate scarcely organized, with the House committees not yet appointed and with

Mr. Morgan declared that the attitude of the United States in respect of all the countries of the Western Hemisphere, was a very distinct one.

That attitude had been assumed early in the history of the American Government—assumed sedately and confidently—and had been re-asserted on every opportune occasion from the date of its announcement by President Monrodown to the last message from the Fresident of the United States.

Mr. Sherman said that he sympathized with the Senator from Alabama; and hoped that the recent movement in Brazil might lead to the establishment of a firm, strong, powerful republic, a kindred sister of the republic of the United States. Although in public he has shown no sign of remorse and his face has been as devoid of any evidence of emotion as that of the Egyptian Sphynx, there can be no doubt that he deeply regrets his crime. He sits in his cell for hours with his head bowed down on his hands, and those who have the opportunity to observe him, say that on such occasions his eyes are suffused with tears. In conversation with his jailer he stated a day or two ago that he intended to devote the rest of his time to preparing for the future world. A piece of fence rall and a mace were found where he fell. The cuts on the side of his head show plainly that these were the instruments used. Government in the matter, is the rather shadowy statement that the Portuguese Government had no intention of insisting upon her claims in Africa to the end of establishing them, or attempting to do so, but is merely prolonging the dispute in order to throw dust in the eyes of any other powers likely to discover the real object in view.

The earnestness of the British officials and the British public in resenting the pretensions of Portugal leads them to give little or no credence to any part of the story, but it is here given for what it is worth.

It is asserted that the Portuguese Monarch and his ministers, fluding the trend of publicopinion irresistibly in the direction of a republic, although they emphatically deny that this is the case, have lately had recourse of secret communication with the Spanish Republican leaders, laying before them a proposition to merge Spain and Portugal into a homogeneous republic, with Senor Castelar as President, and a Ministry composed of President, and a Ministry composed of Spanish and Portuguese statesmen in equal numbers. This proposition, it is alleged, embodies the conditions that the Portuguese reigning family shall be permitted to reside at Portugal or cleewhere, at will, and that the civil list shall be continued; any concessions which may be made to the royal family of Spain to be settled wholly by the Spanish Republicans.

The Portuguese Monarchists, it is asserted, are led to take this step in consequence of their conviction that a Republican rising in the country at no very distant date is almost inevitable.
